Connally to Treasury; Kennedy in New Post

By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14-President Nixon today named a leading Texas Democrat, former Gov. John B. Connally, to be Secretary of the Treasury, replacing David M. Ken-nedy, who will become a roving ambassador dealing mainly with European economic affairs.

The Connally appointment, personally announced by the President, was a surprise and Washington observers immediately assigned a political significance to it. Mr. Connally, 53, a Houston lawyer. was a protégé and close aide of former President Johnson, and served as President Kennedy's first ecretary of the Navy.

President Nixon's economic policles have been in deep trouble in the present Democratic-controlled Congress and his nomination of a Democrat with links to the preceding administrations is seen as a bid to improve Capitol Hill support for Nixon programs.

The President put it this way as he spoke with the press while the tall, handsome Texan smiled

"We have a Republican Presi-dent and a Democratic Congress, hut the problems we have are problems. We need to approach them in a blpartisan manner."

Mr. Connally becomes the first Democrat appointed to a cabinet department post by President Nixon, who has been criticized by top Democrats for sharply partisan comments in the recent political campaign. The Connally ap-pointment, which some saw as a peace gesture to Democrats who will control the new Congress, was hailed by both Republicans and Democrats on Capitol Hill.

Some Pennsylvania Convicts To Spend Christmas at Home

HARRISBURG, Pa., Dec. 14 (AP).—Pennsylvania officials are planning to let some prisoners go home for weekends, some of them in time for Christmas, to help them get ready for freedom

"Most prisoners are returned to the community sometime," said State Attorney General Fred Speaker. "If we keep them walled up all the time and let them go, the change is too abrupt." Speaker said about 50 prisoners, most of them nearing the end of their terms, are eligible for the furloughs. Most of them are now detained at pre-release centers, where they work and sometimes live outside of jail,

Mr. Speaker said he had considered "conjugal visits" for model prisoners, but said the furlough system was "an impressive alternative." Convicts serving life sentences or those whose familles live out of state are not eligible.

.. Not Sure It's Right Thing "I'm not sure if we're doing the right thing," said Mr. Speaker, "but I do know that what we have been doing until now has not been entirely right. We have to try these new approaches to penal reform." Connecticut has a similar program and reports there have been no escapes because of it.

Allyn Sielaff, state commissioner of corrections, said that while the program is aimed at getting prisoners ready to reenter society it may reduce homosexuality in jails.

"We've got to develop alternatives to the completely artificial way of life the men lead in these institutions," said Mr. Sielaff. . "Our failure to prepare a man for his return to the community breeds more crime," said Mr. Speaker.

Trouble on Flight Of Moon Trainer

HOUSTON, Dec. 14 (Reuters).-

Astronaut Alan Shepard, preparing for his flight to the moon next month, had to cut short a practice moon-landing today after trouble developed in the training vehicle. Watched by reporters and photographers at Ellington Air Force Base here, the Apollo-14 commander was making his 20th flight aboard the vehicle, a strange, in-sect-like contraption that simulates the effect of landing on the one-sixth gravity of the moon,

The jet-powered vehicle automa tically switched to its backup control system after registering an apparent fault in the prime system. "Thad to terminate it a bit early,"
Capt. Shepard said afterwards.

In March, 1942, Lord Slim arrived in Burms to command the First Burma Corps through the long, fighting retreat through jungles to India where he commanded the 15th Indian Corps and planned strategies for the liberation of Burma.

Fought Through Monsoons

He pioneered techniques of fighting in the rain and mud of monsoons and used air drops to transport and supply whole divisions before leading his 14th Army troops to victory against the Japanese at Kohima and Imphal, India.

Transferring an entire corps from the north to his right flank, Lord Slim surprised the Japanes forces at Meiktila while other troops fought across the Irrawady River upstream, then charged on to capture Rangoon.

Like Viscount Montgomery, Lord Slim made a practice of speaking to his troops personally. I want you to see what I look like, not because I think I'm any oil painting, but because you ought to know what the bloke giving the orders looks like," he told them. An oil painting he was not, Lord

Two Mideastern Views

Israeli Defense Minister Dayan made it clear that he did not come to the United States to negotiate with Washington, and that this was a matter for direct talks oetween Premier Golda Meir and President Nixon, And, while King Hussein of Jordan was not as candid about the limitations of his own influence in the Arab world, those limitations are well known. Nevertheless, the effect of the two visits on American public and official opinion could be considerable.

It must be conceded that the king came off rather better from the exchange than the minister of defense. Gen. Dayan asserted that Israel would negotiate under no preconditions, and would require assurances that there would be no intervention by the Security Cooncil. He etated quite flatly that Israel would not be content with merely "minor rectifications" in ber borders with the Arab states, and he was equally emphatic in rejecting any UN peace-keeping force on Israeli soil.

King Hussein, on the other hand, said that direct Soviet-American association with peace-keeping "might eimplify matters." He appeared willing to accept some territorial adjoetments, but said, with logic and practical good sense, that "eecure boundariaa in this time and age do not exist except if there is justice and a desire on both sides to maintain a state of peace."

Therein lies the weakness of Gen. Dayan's contention that Israel must hold etrategic frontiers, and his assertion that Israel had found no substitute for her own forces as a guarantee for peace. For Israel's own forces have not, in fact, guaranteed peace, nor is there any likelihood that they would be able to do so, whatever frontier adjustmente might be made. Nor can a state whose basis for existence in international law ie founded on the decrees of the United Nations afford to dismiss too lightly the words or acts of the world organization.

The United States cannot dictate to Israel-or will not. That has been proved on any number of occasions, including the 1967 war. But neither can the United States afford to give Israel long-term assurances of military and diplomatic support if Israel adopts positione that will not only insure continued Arab hostility (that may be unavoidable) but also Soviet support for the Arabe, plus chillineee toward Israel from the rest of the Western powers and strong anti-Israeli activity within the UN.

There are, of course, good emotional and historical reasons for the stand Gen. Dayan bas taken. King Hussein'e moderation is not typical of the Arab leadership, and may not even prevail in his own divided country. But the United States has its own emotional. historical and highly practical reasons for being troubled over the Dayan view of the Middle East and welcoming that of the king.

Switch in Vietnam Policy?

The most critical question raised by President Nixon's threat to resume the bombing of North Vietnam if Hanoi's forces "increase the level of fighting" in the South is whether a decision already has been made to reverse policy and re-escalate the war.

Senators Fulbright and Symington interpret recent events as evidence that this decision has been made. Administration officials assert that the President's news conference statement merely has made more explicit previous warnings of retaliation if North Vietnam steps up infiltration and endangers American troops in the South as thair numbers are reduced.

Time will show which thesis is correct. But the argument underlines the major weakness in the program of Vietnamization. The policy of American withdrawal, while turning over conduct of the war to Saigon, depende for its completion on Communist for bearance.

So far, Hanol and the Viet Cong have held their band. They have shifted from largeunit warfare to guerrilla operations and subversion, permitting the level of combat and casualties to decline. This, as much as allied battlefield successes, explains the military lull and Saigon's apparent control of regions previously contested.

President Nixon's gamble has been that Hanoi will continue to see it as being in its interest not to impede the American withdrawal, as long as it continues steadily. Hanoi is on notice that attempts to speed tbat withdrawal by stepping up attacks on the declining American forces might halt the process and bring back the heavy bombing of North Vietnam. The large-scale air strikes at North Vietnam in May and November were, among other things, signals that these warnings are serious.

Hanol, however, may not he deterred forever, especially if it feels that the Viet Cong is losing too much ground politically or if the American withdrawal halts, leaving residual forces as an aid to Salgon in air support and logistics.

Moreover, President Nixon's warnings are an admission that Hanoi has the capability at any time of stepping up infiltration, as it has been doing recently, and the level of combat. That capability is a threat not only to the declining American forces but, even more, to the viability of the Saigon government after American withdrawal.

For these and other reasons a political settlement negotiated in Paris, which might embody international guarantees and supervision, would be a much more promising way both to terminate American involvement and to achieve a stable solution.

The administration pays lip service to this concept, but has failed to persevere in implementing it. November's air strikes at North Vietnam and the ill-conceived prisoner. rescue attempt at Son Tay have compromised the serious peace proposals made in October. An American initiative to achieve extended year-end cease-fire might provide another opportunity to get negotia- a lecture rejecting "cries of detions going, but Mr. Nixon now appears to have ruled this out.

Moreover, the administration seems to be broadening its interpretation of the "understandings" that accompanied the full halt in the bombing of North Vietnam in November, 1968. A new rationale for resumption of bombing has been established by Mr. Nixon's news conference statement and by Secretary Laird's subsequent hint that bombing might be resumed if there were no progress in the Paris talks.

Three years of daily bombing proved by 1968 that air attacks could inflict economie and human pain, but could not weaken Hanoi's will. Nor did they significantly impede infiltration of men and supplies into the South. They did, bowever, make peace talks impossible.

The November bombing led Hanol to withdraw from one session of the Paris negotiations. Reaumption of regular hombing would finally scuttle the conference that, desplie the current stalemate, represents the soie hope of ultimately achieving a political set-

Nixon and Hanoi

President Nixon is holding with admirable tenacity to his program for extracting America from Vietnam while at the same time avoiding what would amount to a sellout to the Communists there. As time goes on, tension is already mounting over how Hanol may contemplate frustrating the whole operation. We can take it as axiomatic that frustrating it. somehow, sometime, is now a first priority for the North Vietnamese capital.

Despite their more than 20 years of relatively successful "fighting and talking" to gain their objectives, things can scarcely ever have looked eo umpromising for them in South Vietnam, militarily and politically.

LONDON.—Sir Peter Medawar is one of the great scientific figures of Britain and the Western world: the holder of degrees from Oxford, Cambridge, Liege and a half-dozen other universities, direc-tor of the National Institute for Medical Research, winner of the Nobel Prize for medicine. But be is more than that. He is a scientist-philosopher, a voice of reason, the rare man who projects a serene, disinterested passion for truth.

A year ago, as president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, Sir Peter gave spair" about science and technologv. It is not science that threatens civilization, he said, but human folly-and more science will be needed to correct that.

The lecture was read by some as an attack on the prophets of environmental doom. In the magazine Commentary, for example, Sir Peter's optimism was contrasted with the despairing views of Paul Ehrlich, who has written so powerfully about the threat of over-

Paul Ehrlich's thesis, Sir Peter says, is that unless we control even for the 3.5 billion people now population, no technology can save the world from disaster. Sir Peter seems to accept that. His relative optimism lies in the hope that science can solve the population problem: "I believe that one day a fully effective and medically unobjectionable method will be devised for preventing conception."

But even if we arrest the population rise, Sir Peter suggests, and even if science prodoces more wonders, Ehrlich is right to say that we must learn to live in a different way now: "We shall have to abandon a style of economy marked by profligate production, consumption and waste for something more like a space-ship economy marked by frugality, recycl-ing and above all by foretbought" There in a sentence is what the world and its leaders must some-

The SST is an extreme example of the economics of waste, combined in this case with a direct threat to our surroundings. Tha Senate vote against funding the plane provided the occasion for rethinking its implications. Yet President Nixon and his men, in kneejerk reaction, produced all the tired old arguments about progress and the national interest.

It is human nature to tune out the unpleasant, and the implications of growing population and extravagant production are extremely unpleasant: But Presidents and the rest of us know they are there, just as we have only to open our eyes and ears to know how pollution bruises the senses and threatens life.

In other words, the CIA has been generally teiling it like it is rather calculated to please and appease the Establishment in Saigon and Washington.

For that reason, the agency has incurred the envy of State Department officials, the wraib of senior American military officers and something less than full White sequence, its presence in Vietnam has been gradually reduced. There are virtually no CIA men now working at the district and village levels. Instead, the estimated 50 CIA operatives currently stationed outside Saigon are assigned mainly to provincial headquarters, where their jobs are largely ritual-

According to these classified studies. Viet Cong political activists are still very much alive in those provinces, even though they have been compelled by increased Saigon government activity to operate more covertly at the present time.

The studies estimate, therefore, that the Communists could make a considerable showing in the two provinces even in a free election if they had eight or nine months doring a cease-fire in which to reassemble their apparatus and resume their efforts to influence the local population.

Implicit in this investigation is the euggestion that President Nguyen Van Thieu's Saigon regime is at its strongest point at the moment, and might perform relatively well were a political settlement initiated quickly.

saw something I had not seen or thought of for nearly 30 years, but which must have become so embedded in my subconscious that it instantly conjured up, in the greatest detail, the whole period of which it was a symbol. It was the sight of a man walking along the street with a pocket flashlight in his hand, illuminating a tiny patch of light into which his feet steadily moved. During the Second World War it was a constant sight in any British city, as the stringently enforced black-out meant that shop windows were not illuminated at night, that street-lamps were dowsed that anyone permitting even a chink of light to escape from his curtained windows would be committing an offense. "Pot that light out!" became one of the cries of London, chants of the mulfin-sellers and the rag-and-bone men.) --It was therefore a doubly macabre sight to be reminded of those days while crossing Oxford Street in a taxi in 1970. For Oxford Street, still London's premier shopping thoroughfare—it used to be nicknamed "The Ladies" Mile'-was dark. The windows of shops that would normally, at this time of year, be blazing with lights and Christmas decorations were in darkness, not a street-lamp was in operation, even the traffic lights were dead (a fact which made crossing Oxford Street in a taxi in itself a hazardous operation).

A notable example is provided by his truncated account of events preceding his famous "secret speech" of Feb. 24-25, 1956, in which he exposed Stalin's crimes. His account in-dicates that the speech was rather spur-of-the-moment and Bt his suggestion, over the opposition of many colleagues. But the historical record demonstrates that public de-Stalinization really was under way before the convening of the 20th party congress, at which he spoke. It had begun nearly siz weeks before at a conference of party historians in Moscow and was outlined on Feb. 16, more than a week before Mr. Khrushchev spoke, by Anastas I. Mikoyan:

A seeming distortion occurs in Mr. Khrushchev's portrayal of Mr. Mikoyan, who was closely associated with Mr. Khrushchev's rise to power. But, possibly because Mr. Mikovan joined the coup that displaced Mr. Khrushchev, the remembrances picture him as an ally of the hated police chief, Levrenti P.

The description of Mr. Khrushchev's relations with Mao Tse-tung seems deliberately tendentious, and the account of the 1958 rupture between the Soviet Union and China over the Formosa Strait crisis manages not to mention Taiwan or the fact that the row concerned Peking's demand for nuclear missile support and Mr. Khrush-

News Analysis Soviet View of Cuba Missile Crisis

By Max Frankel

WASHINGTON, Dec. 14 (NYT).-The account of the Cuban missile crisis attributed former Premier Nikita Khrushchev, though far from complete and interpreted as a victory for Soviet diplomacy. does not vary significantly from American perceptions of the

If credible, the most interesting portions of the memoirs attributed to Mr. Khrushchev bear on Soviet motives for the emplacement of missiles in the Carlobean. The former Soviet leader takes personal responsibility for the idea and contends, as he did at the time, that his only purpose was to deter an Ameircan invasion of Cuba.

Former President Kennedy and his aides always suspected that Mr. Khrushchev had been urged or even forced into the Cuban missile buildup by his military strategists. They speculated, but could never prove, that apart from benefits in prestige and diplomacy, the Soviet leaders were seeking to move intermediate range missiles within striking distance of the United States so as to save on the time and money needed to build up B larger force of intercontinental weapons.

The massive buildup of Soviet long-range missiles and nuclear submarines was not decided upon until after the Soriet withdrawal from Cuba and did not begin to match the United States strategic force until last year. The Khrushchev memoir, like the Khrushchev speeches at the of Cubs as the only motive. thus making possible the claim of "victory" when President Kennedy traded B no invasion pledge for removal of the Soviet weapons.

Mr. Khrushchev's argument that Cubs had to be defended at any cost to preserve Soviet prestige and influence in Latin America, and elsewhere, is the mirror image of reasoning inside the Kennedy administration! Kennedy felt at once that acquiescence in the missile hulldup would give dangerous impetus to Soviet influence in the Western hemisphere and cast doubt upon American re-

In relating some of the speci-fic events of the crisis itself, the Khrushchev document adds nothing important to American accounts, lesves out a great deal and appears to be misleading on several points.

It acknowledges a destre to take the United States by surprise, but the Khrushchev account does not explain why his offers of a settlement came in two markedly different letters, one highly personal and emotional and the other much more formal and including a demand for the removal of American missiles from Turkey.

It does not report anything about the Soviet decision-making process at the time and, in pretending that Mr. Khrushchev was free to do as be pleased, contradicts another portion of the Life magazine materials in which the former Soviet leader says he lost "full control" over policy to more militant anti-American factions mentins hefore the Cuban crisis. The Khrusbchev version is deceptive when it claims that Soviet ships headed "straight through the American naval blockade and that no ships were stopped or checked. According to Robert P. Kennedy's memoir, as well as other contemporary American accounts. Soviet vessels stopped dead in the water or reversed course sway from Cuba less than one hour before the fateful interception of three of them, including a submarine.

Unconvincing Part

The least persuasive portion of the account consists of some of the quotations attributed to Robert Kennedy. From what the President's brother has written, however, it is entirely possible that his views and words were understood-or misunderstood-in the indicated

The President's brother, in two urgent meetings during the crisis with Soviet Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin, no doubt also warned that events could become "irreversible" beyond the President's retrieval and probably cited the "peculiarities" of the American system to explain the need for forceful American response and firm proof of Soviet withdrawal, It is doubtful that he expressed fear of the President's "overthrow" by "the military," but his own book records John Kennedy's feeling that if he had not moved to expel Soviet nuclear weapons from this hemisphere, "I would have been impeached" chev's refusal unless Communist China put all its armed forces under Soviet command. The former Soviet leader is almost certainly tendentious in contending that just hefore the Geneva conference of 1954 on Indochina Premier Chou En-lai of Communist China was about to end support for North Vietnam because the situation was "hopeless." The Chinese were then deeply involved with Ho Chi Minh and Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap in preparing the trap at Dienblenphn that ended French military power in Indochina.

One of Mr. Khrushchev's most misleading and confusing episodes deals with his own rise to prominence in Moscow at the beginning of the 1980s. He gives credit for his promotion to Nadezhda Alliluyeva, Stalin's wife, whereas the record clearly shows he was a protege of Lazar M. Kaganovich, eventually his deadly enemy in the Polithuro. Valued Document

Despite these distortions, the omissions, the probable censorships, the confusions arising from weakened memory and earnest desire for political vindication-despite all this, the value of the document to historians is still considerable.

Basically it gives an insider's version. When compared to the history carefully reconstructed by Western scholars, it provides insights not so much into events as into the atmosphere of the Kremlin and Stalinesque society.
One of America's greatest

Soviet scholars has expressed skepticism about the validity of the remembrances. Nowhere is there any discussion of principle," he said. "No questions of ideology arise in the debates of the Politburo. They all sound like a hunch of high school students."

But this, almost certainly, is the great merit of "Khrushchev Remembers." It underscores spectacularly the venality, the banality, the petty intrigue, the crude ignarance, the ruthless ri-valry of the men in the Kremlin and the society that revolved around Stalin. Ideology in the Marxist sense was left at the door along with the sidearms that military men were not al-lowed to bring into the Kremlin under Stalin

It was a society of dangerous men who knew that their lives depended on the whim of one increasingly paranold old man.
After Stalin, Mr. Khrushchev makes plain, the atmosphere changed and some fresh air came in, largely because of him. Now, be is equally clear, the doors are slamming shut again.

Vatican Faults U.S. Priests in Political Role

Article Delayed Until Nov. Elections Passed

By Louis B. Fleming ROME, Dec. 14.—The entry of Roman Catholic priests into politics in the United States is sharply criticized in B recent English edi tion of L'Osservatore Romano, the official Vatican newspaper.

The article was written by the Rev. Donald Wnerl, secretary to John Joseph Cardinal Wright, head of the sacred congregation for priests, indicating that it carries the highest aothority of the church on the matter. But publication of the article was deliberately held up until after the U.S. elections last month to avoid charges of interference and the article was limited to the weekly English edition of the news paper and not printed in the daily Italian edition.

The entry into American politics goes against what has long heen the American political experience and the recent expression of similar experiences in the Second Vatican Council," Father Wuerl writes, Sees Paradox

"Almost paradoxically, the arrival on the political scene of the priestoffice seeker comes at a time when the emphasis within the church is on the need to free priests from unnecessary duties in the secular order, thus enabling them to coocentrate full time on those things which only a priest can do." the rticle continued. Father Wuerl cites documents of the Vatican Council emphasizing the distinct role of laymen while priests are concerned with spiritual

In the American elections thi year, seven priests were candidates. Only three survived primary elections and of these one was elected to Congress and one to the Mas sachusetts legislature.

Some of the priests, including the Rev. Robert Drinan, the Jesuit elected to the House of Representatives, reportedly had the permission of their superiors.

Taking a last glance at the page proofe the other day (the magazine goes on sale today). Miss Moreau looked-and acted-the part of an editor, in her pretty Cardin tangerine ensemble-ber glasses stuck in the neck of her outfit. She had a relaxed manner and a nice word for everybody on the staff. "I accepted the chailenge," she said, "because I love refined living. Luxury is es-sential. And Vogue stands for

"We tried to leave her completely free." sald Robert Cai'lé, director of the ma-"Of course, the magazine has a few musts, but otherwise, she did what she wanted.

A Nude

Not quite everything however. There was one nude picture that didn't make the grade. "We must be a bit careful," said Mr. Caillé, and a sheroet recipe had to be dropped for lack of space. Strangely enough. Miss Moreau didn't mind about the nude but. being a terrific cook, she did moan about the sherbet. "But my housekeeper." she said, "is pleased. She didn't like my passing our recipes around."

Vogue, and other women's magazines, have been on a nudity kick for quite awhile, but Miss Moreau injected her own sexy touch. She asked five famous men to tell, with pictures, which part of the woman's body they liked best. For singer Georges Moustaki it was the innocent shoulder line but dancer Jean Babilée confessed a weakness for the navel.

influenced by her movie career. "Being a beginner, it was natural that I should lean toward something I knew." So, when it came to fashion, she asked prominent Paris designers to create dream dresses that would fit in the moods of famous movie directors. Saint-Laurent chose Bunuel and Orson Welles: Ungaro, Fellini and Andy Warhol: Cardin, Ingmar Bergman and Alain Resnais; Balmain, Jean Cocteau: Givenchy, Visconti; Paco Rabanne, Fritz Lang: and Marc Bohan fell for Joseph Losey. These unique dresses, by the way, will be on sale in the couturiers' boutiques this month. Asked which one she liked herself. Miss Moreau reacted like a true fashion editor: "I really never thought of those dresses in terms of myself." she said.

The ski feature was a problem because Miss Morea hates snow. So she came up with the idea of spoofing the whole thing with a comic strip approach and the collaboration of show business friends. Nathaile Delon and Jean-Louis Trintignant agreed to play the parts in the funny script by Prançoise Dorin. The result is a good gag and refreshingly anti-Vogue.

Somehow, Miss Moreau wasn't crazy about the cover, where she sits, looking her giamorous. mysterious seif. rapped in miles of white fox. "It's more Moreau than Jeanne," ehe said with her funny

Although she is not about to switch careers. "A chacun son mctier (to everyone his trade), Miss Moreau sald she loved working on the magazine "because it's fuli of women. No, really, I mean it. I found out that I loved working with women because they do serious things lightly."

As for the magazine, Mr. Caillé confessed that he wouldn't mind keeping Miss Moreau as a contributing editor. On movies, perhaps. "Not at all," she said, "I'd do the cooking section.

Kenneth Clark's 'Civilisation'

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

DARIS, Dec. 14.-Sir Kenneth Clark's series of thirteen 52minute color films, bearing the overall title of "Civilisation," produced by the British Broadcasting Corporation, has been enormously successful every-where it has been shown: Great Britain, the United States, Switzerland Germany, Holland and Sweden. The series is now being shown in Finland and Denmark and will be on Belgian television in January.

Negotiations with ORTF are under way, according to a BEC spokesman, and the hope is that the Clark series will be seen on French television late next year. But, in the meantime, the American Library in Paris has acquired prints of two installments and is screening them as a public service at the Grand Palais. The first showing was last week. Two are scheduled tomer-row, at 5 p.m. and 7 p.m. Alimited number of tickets (for which there is no charge) will be available at the door.

The two sections-"Prose and Communications" and "Heroic Materialism"—whet the appetite for the other cleven. The first concerns the Reformation, the invention of the printing press and the spread of unorthodox notions which set man free from the lingering hold of superstitious medievalism, tracing the intellectual revolt from Luther to Tolstoi. The second pictures the coming of the Machine Age, the Industrial Revolution, and the rise of capitalism in the 19th century. Sir Kenneth has devised a method of communication of his own. Instead of voicing his com-mentary off-screen, always an irritating procedure, he comes before the cameras to address us direct'y, providing a sort of Burton Holmes travel lecture of his explorations in the world of art and lucas.

He is a delightful traveling companion as with the casual tact and pleasing delivery of a seasoned British drawing-room performer he unobtrustvely conducts us about art galleries, museums, libraries and historic sites. Now he stands retiringly before Shakespeare's birthplace at Stratford as an actor appears to render some soliloguies of the Bard; now he is in Montaigne's study looking out on the rolling countryside; now he accompanies us across New York harbor in a speedboat. He func-tions as the property man of confiding to us ingratiatingly the secrets of the scene, illuminating all with his informa-tion and asides.

The Clark view of Western man's heritage and estate is interestingly summarized in the final film. His interpretation is witty, humane, exhibarating and enormously erudite, while his artistic taste—he was a pupil of Bernard Berenson -- is impeccable. His outlook is conservative, somewhat square perhaps, but convincingly solid ( remember that this designed for popular tion and that he is seri chauffeur for culture millions. I have never before seen a great number of them displayed together, them have a boring effect. There is no reason at all, of course, why an artist should not work and rework a theme, especially if he is a quiet, retiring, scholarly person as was Mo-randi; but it does his memory no service whatever to bring all these variations on a theme to-gether. The 50 etchings are another matter altogether; technically, esthetically and spiritually of the greatest interest. The exhibition is beautifully displayed, in a setting designed by Prof. Carlo Scarpa.

The Business of Statistics: Who in the U.S. to Believe?

By Eileen Shanahan

WASHINGTON (NYT) -As if the Nixon administration were not already having enough trouble with the economy, it has now embarked on a public relations policy that can only worsen its problems—and the problems of all officials who will have to cope with the economy in the future.

The administration has decided that the hasic economic statistics prepared in various government agencies, and the experts who prepare them, cannot be trusted to speak directly to the public.

Not only has the administration undertaken its own inter-pretations of some of the fig-ures, but recently it has also come forth with some different figures of its own.

The resul can only he, as it. has been, confusion and, worse, the development of skepticism about the integrity of the basic statistics.

The latest case involved what is surely the most politically-sensitive of all the statistics; unemployment figures.

The experts at the Bureau of Labor Statistics, in explaining a November increase, said that some of it obviously could be attributed to layoffs in companies that were suppliers to then strike-bound General Motors, but that they could not estimate exactly how much. Nor would they estimate what the unemployment rate might have been without the strike. However. President Nixon's press secretary, Ronald L. Zieg-ler, paraphrasing a Council of Economic Advisers memorandum, said that the unemploy-ment rate could have been as much as half a percentage point lower in November, without the strike, and implied that the rate would have fallen from the First of all, that implication was wrong. The council did not claim that the unemployment rate would have declined in November without the strike. Secondly, the council had actually estimated the effect at 0.4 percent, which was rounded up to 0.5 percent in Mr. Ziegler's statement. Whether the error was Mr. Ziegler's cannot be established since no one will permit publication of the council's memo.

Of possibly more consequence than Mr. Ziegler's misrepresentations, however, is the very existence of unemployment figures prepared by the Council of Economic Advisers.

The council, it turns out, had based its estimate of strikelinked unemployment on a series of computations, the first step of which was a Commerce Department estimate of the gross national product lost in the strike. From there, estimates were derived of the loss in compensation of employees and from that the number of workers on short hours or without jobs. The methodology was, some-how, not of a sort to instill enormous confidence in the accuracy of the results.

The Second Case Possibly an even worse case arose over the interpretation of industrial production figures for November. The Federal Reserve Board concluded that about half of the decline in the November index was related to the GM strike. The CEA said that all of the drop stemmed from the strike. The argument here centered both on statistical methodology and on simple reasoning such as the question, asked by Fed experts: If it was all GM, why did such sectors of the index as aircraft and construction materials show declines? The real issue is not so much whose methodology is right, but whether there are going to he two sets of statistics or at least two sets of interpreta-tions—whenever the adminis-tration does not like the figures worked out by career civil servants. Maintenance of public confidence in the integrity of the statistics is always a problem when the performance of the economy hecomes a matter of political dispute.

It is hard enough to maintain that confidence among business and public policy decision-makers when the same figures and the same interpretations are given. When the interpretations are different-worse yet, when the numbers are different—who can expect the public to helieve that the whole exercise is honest?

The new generations of communications and computer equipment will make it all happen again—just the way it happened from 1964 up when the old FAIRCHILD CAMERA rose from $20 to $200 while TEXAS INSTRUMENTS climbed from $30 to $144. And if you know a lot of skeptics who say a boom like the old one can't develop in today's bad-news atmosphere, ask them what they were saying six and seven years ago when foundations were being dug for the last growth-industry eruption. Robert McNamara had been cleaning up the Pentagon, you may remember; and all the high-technology stocks which later multiplied many times over were in massive public liquidation because of discouraging statistics.

While bad news is frightening to most people, there are others who make it their business to tackle causes and come up with solutions. These are the interests which build new bull markets out of the discards shaken loose by cyclical contractions; and to plot and project progress out of mid 1970's depths of confusion KAB keeps in direct communication with innovators in new growth disciplines ranging from computer output microfilm (COM) to metal oxide semiconductors (MOS).

The weekly KAB studies that will help you attune your planning and investing to the new upswing are available on a trial basis at $5 U.S. for our next five reports—returnable if you are not impressed within two weeks. On the diagramed deal; West's opening bid of one diamond was actually a help to North-South in reaching the slam.

South's response of four hearts to his partner's takeout double was on the aggressive side, and some players would be content to bid three hearts. His jump to six diamonds in response to Blackwood showed the diamond void and an ace, so North made an optimistic jump to seven hearts, failing to allow for the possibility that there could be a trump loser. The declarer turned pale when the dummy appeared. But he felt better after a little thought, for he could place virtually every card in the opponents' hands.

West's trump lead indicated that he did not hold the heart queen, and as a singleton trump would be a risky lead, the queen could be expected to fall from the East side under the ace, king. There were 12 high-card points missing in the other suits, and West surely held all of them to justify his opening bid. On that analysis, it was possible to foresec a squeeze against West in the minor suits to make the slam.

His play succeeded. Dummy's top hearts were played, dropping the queen, and the spade ace was cashed. A diamond was ruffed, and a spade finesse was taken successfully. The remain-

JUDGING from several humty expose children to the dred items I have just finishof thing? Is it good for thing? dred items I have just finished plowing through, 1970 does not seem to have been a vintage. year for children's books. But 1970 should at least be remembered as the year in which Maurice Sendak's "In the Night Kitchen" was published which makes it a very good year after all. I have just finished "reading" Mr. Sendak's picture book for about the dozenth time, andit has not yet palled in the slightest. In fact, I'd venture to guess that it will eventually become some sort of classic. And like all truly original creations, it has already begun to stir up controversy,

The book is not easy to describe. To say that it is visually superb-boldly designed, en-chantingly colored in muted shades, endlessly fun to explore and a remarkable stylistic de-parture from Mr. Sendak's previous work seems almost beside the point.

A summary of its plot tells very little: A small boy named Mickey wakes up in the night, hears a thumping coming from below his room and shouts for "Quiet down there!" Suddenly he is falling "through the dark, out of his clothes, past the moon and his mama and papa sleeping tight; into the light of the night kitchen?" There three enormous pink-nosed bakers (each of whom looks like Oliver Hardy) mistake Michay for milk Hardy) mistake Mickey for milk, stir him into the batter for a cake they are preparing and pop him into an oven.

But Mickey pops right out again, crying. "I'm not the milk and the milk's not me! I'm Mickey!" Then he shapes the hatter into an airplane and Thes up into the night "and over the top of the Milky Way in the Night "Kitchen" to a gigantic milk bottle towering over a city made of oversize food packages and kitchen utensils. He climbs out of his airplane, dives into the milk, scoops up a jugful, pours it over the rim of the bottle into the batter standing below, then floats gently down to his bed "cakefree and dried," and falls back to sleep, "Yum!"

Now, when I first read "In the Night Kitchen," I found my-self charmed by Sendak's visual wit, but mildly disturbed by the idea of Mickey submerged in the cake batter and cooking in the oven. Wouldn't a child find this quite terrifying? Then I began to probe my anxiety and to consider other elements of the story-the thumping downstairs that awakens Mickey, his floating and flying, the milk and the many suggestive visual images in the flustrations. And the more I thought about it the more "In the Night Kitchen" appeared to be an orchestra-tion of sexual dream symbols.

some people have argued? .A dream of birth aroused by the sound of parents making love? ("Quiet down there!") I'd prefer not to be any more specific. ## Thoughts of an All-Pro Investigator

By Robert Lipsyte

NEW YORK, Dec. 14 (NYT).

—A portrait of the professional athlete as a potential fixer: "You have a family to support, and an ailing knee. You know von've got a year or two left, at most. Maybe less if the bonus rookie works out well. You love attention, most athletes love attention, and you're an offensive lineman and you haven't been getting much attention since college. Now here a someone you met at the bar, friendly, ingratiating. He starts picking up tabs, doing you little favors, cetting you things wholesale, fussing over you. You start talking freely to him, start telling him things that will help him bet the games.

"You're a quarterback, or the scorer on the basketball team; $50,000 a year, but that's not going to last much longer. And you could start putting away some money, tax free, if you just make sure the point spread works out right for your friend. Maybe you get a coupls of teammates in ou it. You can rationalize it all in your mind; you're not really throwing a game, you'll still win, and the only people who will get hurt are bookies and illegal gamblers. But that's how it starts, you're in their clutches, and you're cheating."

The portrayer is John L. Brennan, a private investigator who tends to look at games through a magnifying glass, darkly. "Money is the key," says Brennan, "profit is the notive. For everything. In all ness Tracks Security Incorporated, a "fact-finding organiza-tion" dedicated to "preventing a fix or any skulduggery" in a sport that many people con-sider shady. For 20 years, Brennan was an official of a similac investigative group at the flat tracks the Thoroughbred Racing Protective Bureau, and hefore that a member of the Federal Bureau of Investigation

He now has a rather grandiose vision that he says will heavy sports bettors and shadow athletes who have the opportunity and motivation to tamper with "the integrity of the spectacle." Brennan belives that no single sport can police itself as effectively as all sports in cooperation.

As he explained it oue day last week in his midtown office, the all-sports agency would be able to afford a bureau of fulltime operatives in every major city. At present, major league sports security is drawn thin nationally, he says, and often must depend on part-timers, in-dustrial security chiefs who cannot always jump right into an investigation, and who usually are not able to develop long-term information.

The full-time investigator would be able to cultivate the local intelligence units, gaining access to their files and sharing information: Are the local crooks interested in sports? Which ones? Do they bet heavily? Spot checks of the city's major league players would be made; are they in to loan sharks, hanging out in undesi-rable bars, bitter at team management? What about the club's owner; does he have "silent" partners? Does he owe a favor to a man who "took care" of some union trouble he had in his main business?

A network of informers is essential to any intelligence operation, and easy enough to set up, said Brennan, because so many people have "a Sherlock Holmes complex or a do-gooder side." Such a network would include messenger boys and secretaries and assistant coaches and even that offensive lineman hungry for attention. Brennan thinks the breath of scandal is getting hotter: Expansion, television money, and a new interest in and accep-tance of gambling through offtrack betting increases the chance of an incident that can't be hushed up and will ruin the image of a sport. 'From a public relations point of view," said Brennan, "an allsports agency is the cheapest insurance policy sport could take out. But it won't happen because football and baseball don't want to admit publicly that there is a gambling prob-"Most sports do a good job promoting themselves. But when the lid blows how are they going to justify having made all that money and not protecting the gain? And then the fans will pay again: The district attorneys and the attorneys gen-eral will have to come in and

WASHINGTON.—I have no intention of passing judgment on Lt. Calley before his court-martial is concluded. But when I read that one of his defense attorneys said that Calley had been ordered to kill

"crerything" in My Lai including livestock and "erery Hring thing" I became intrigued. So I sought out a friend of mine at the Pentagon. and said: "Look, why would anyone Buchwald be ordered to kill livestock?"

"Those were Viet Cong cows." my friend said defensively, "We knew for a fact that the cows at My Lal had given milk to Viet Cong soldiers. Those cows can't claim they didn't know what they were doing."
"But maybe they had no choice." I protested. Two weeks before we went into My Lai, we sent helicopters with loudspeakers over the area. warning everyone to get out. Those cows heard us. and they refused to leave. Therefore, we concluded that the cows were sympathetic to the Communist

Archaeologist Jailed for Art Smuggling

SALONIKA, Greece. Dec. 14 (UPI).—Stephan Gericke, 39, of Munich, was sentenced to seven years imprisonment today by a civil court for the illegal export of Greek antiquities.

Six of Gericke's 12 Greek codefendants received sentences ranging from five months to three years each for assisting him in the illegal trade.

Gericke came to Greece as an archaeologist in 1954 and since then travelled many times to and from Greece exporting antiquities and Byzantine icons, that the chickens had been laying eggs for the Viet Cong for years. They were Red hens." "What about the pigs?"

"The pigs were worse than the chickens. When we went into the village, we found warm pork still cooking in the pots in some of the huts.

"The only way Charlie could have gotten that pork was from My Lal pigs. When our men realized where the pork was coming from, they went berserk and decided to shoot every plg in sight,"

"But the ducks. Why were they ordered to kill the ducks? They weren't even from My Lai"

"In a war, innocent livestock have to be killed. You can't say to men going into battle, 'Kill the cows, kill the chickens, kill the pigs, but don't shoot at the "It seems like such B waste

"You people sitting back here in your comfortable offices in Washington can say you should kill this or you shouldn't kill that hut when you'e out in the field, it's different. You don't have time to ask, 'Is this a good cow or a bad cow? Is this chicken a local chicken or was he brought down from the North to feed Charlie? And that innocent-looking pig walking scross the road. What is he really thinking?" "Then what you're saying is the only good cow is a dead

"You could sum it up that way. When we go into a village, we assume everything on legs is working for Hanol, Sure you make mistakes. But it's still better to err than to let a chicken get away and come hack to haunt you on another day."

"I imagine you can't spare dogs either," I said.

When we say every living thing, we mean every living thing. If you make exceptions. the example will be lost on the Viet Cong. The one lesson we've learned is to let every living thing know that if it helps the enemy, someone is going to pay for it. I'm sure after My Lai that the cows in other villages are going to think twice before they give milk to Charlie."

The Artistic Talents Of a U.S. Ambassador

By Jules B. Farber

THE HAGUE.—The U.S. ampassador to the Netherlands not only donated the stained glass rosette window unveiled in a Hague church a few weeks ago; he also helped to make it. The window, about 9 feet in diameter, was the result of William Middendorf 2d's 12-month apprenticeship in the stelier of 70-year-old Joep Nicolas in Limburg. 'I saw this as a chance to delve into a dying Dutch art," Mr. Middendorf said of his offer of the window to The Hague's English and American Episcopal Church of St. John and St. Philip. Mr. Middendorf, a former banker and Wall Street broker appointed to The Hegue in June, 1969, checked with museum specialists and was told that the only great practitioner of the lete Gothic style in stained-glass making left in Holland was Soon after, Mr. Middendorf was in the middle of Joep Nicolas's studio almost every weekend, working in shirtsleeves

Although he calls himself "strictly a Sunday stained-glass artist," he has become reasonably adept in the skill of making the original cartoons, propping up the pieces to see B harmonious composite emerge, and painting, as well as brushing Bway, to Bchieve shadows and nuances.

"Joep taught me his own technique, which is world-famous, of putting the window into the kiln only once after all the work is done. He uses a second grisaille—a thin mixture of copper oxide, gum arabic and water—and then brushes away to get the highlights. Four or five centuries ago, they had to put the glass into the kiln two or three times and couldn't make changes. At that pace, we'd still be working on the

"It took us four months to complete the rosette because Joep often stopped working to wait for me, since official duties regularly kept me from showing up to do my part. He was very patient with me. We took related Old and New Testament themes and used them in seven petals, outlined in heavy tracery surrounding a roundel with a dove, symbolizing the Holy Spirit. Depicted in realistic style are the Lamb of God, the River and Water of Life, St. Philip and the Ethiopian, and the Baptism in the early Church. You'll see 16 shades of blue in the window, instead of the more usual all white

The window was the ambassador's second foray into Dutch art. Last year he took private lessons at Delft's 17th-century Porcelyne Fles factory "to learn the secrets of this beautiful porcelain. I wanted to be able to make it in the traditional manner."

Earlier this year, he sent President Nixon B Delft blue plate of his own design. "I had done the finished drawing but didn't yet dere paint the porcelain. I turned that over to a much more skilled craftsman," he said.

This Christmas he will give 50 plates bearing his design of a Madonna and Child to diplomats, friends and the President. The first plate in this limited edition was designed by Mr. Middendorf, then copied, glazed and baked by a Dutch

The ambassador, 46, who studied at the Art Students League, has painted for more than 15 years. He has long been interested in 17th-century Netherlands paintings, and his small collection of Rembrandt canvases, on loan to New York's Metropolitan Museum, are often reproduced in the major works on the great Dutch master. Over the years he has also assembled an outstanding collection of historical prints which trace American printmaking from 1670 to 1830. He wrote the introduction to a hook published on this subject by the Smithsonian Institution Press. His print collection has been touring U.S. museums since 1969 and is currently on show at the Boston Museum
